▲ About this research

The question what is security will keep readers, academia, and reporters alike thinking throughout this 11 page research publication. Research concludes terrorism is not new, police began being paid by public governments as late as 1800, and 60 billion dollars in annual budget authority is too great an amount for the new U.S. Cabinet Secretary's Department of Homeland Security which neither got created to provide global security nor to intake police reports.

Indistinguishable, "The Department of Justice boasts a broad array of national security, federal law enforcement, and criminal justice responsibilities but also provides funding to state and local law enforcement partners in order to bring counter-terrorism, counter-intelligence, and foreign intelligence surveillance operations under a single authority— separate from the Department of Homeland Security's," said Church Publishing in White Paper on Security. "Including...Departments of Justice, Homeland Security, and Defense, the U.S. government now spends about $1.4 trillion keeping people from fear and harm."

However, beyond federal government local police ranks swelled since 1992. In 2008 the number of full-time employees working in local law enforcement was 1,133,915 and Los Angeles Airports has the third-largest local police department with a transportation jurisdiction. Far from Sir Robert Peel's Metropolitan Police Act of 1829, which organized the world's first 1,000 public police constables in London less than 200 years prior, over 5 million now get employed by government to provide U.S. security.

Church's White Paper on Security contains additional research on the 50 States' Departments of Corrections. An insert lists each state's annual expenditure spent on prisons and corrections including juvenile justice and community supervision. Research totals State spending with the Department of Justice's FY15 Federal Bureau of Prisons and Prisoner Detention budgets then concludes a national corrections expenditure estimate. Prison is one way to mitigate security threats. To more accurately address questions how to address insecurity and how much do security solutions cost Church's research claims $56.9 billion is spent annually by U.S. state and federal governments incarcerating offenders plus the insert's methodology includes a rationale to estimate all local jails expenditure.

PUBLIC POLICING

1667: Gabriel Nicolas de la Reynie combines four police-forces under King Louis XIV and provides social services until French Revolution.

1800: The first public police department in Great Britain's current United Kingdom gets created by the Glasgow Police Act.

1822: Irish Constabulary Act permanently arms forces under UK controlled Inspectors to subvert campaigns led by the impoverished in Ireland.

1829: British Home Secretary Sir Robert Peel's Metropolitan Police Act organized a public police force along civilian lines in London, issuing blue uniforms to remain neutral of the military.

1844: New York City's Municipal Police Act abolished night-watchmen and allowed the Mayor to select 200 police officers. Copper stars worn on their chests beget the moniker: Cops.

2001: Warrantless phone, internet, and search capacity is legislated by a new USA Patriot Act.

2002: Since a Cabinet-level U.S. Department of Homeland Security is created then charged with preventing and deterring terrorism, other Departments and police claim the same mission.

In 2014 Church Publishing has two new novels underway and now publishes non-fiction such as "White Paper on Security." Policy aside, like Congressional Committees from 1970 Church's main triumph has been informational.
